From the UNIVERSAL CHRONICLE.

Comparison of the King of Prussia with Cæsar.

REVOLUTIONS never failed to produce great Characters. Such were known and admired in Times, which must seem Fabulous to After-ages, for the Blindness of Envy, or the Ignorance of Flattery. Such are equally dear to Mankind, [illegible]

Both of them formed upon this Composition of Armies about the small Body of Men which were one to the Rest of their several Empires, yet never valuing them as Rabble. The Marriages of both were Matters of Interest rather than Inclination; but in this Particular, this Magnanimity of the Prussian greatly surpasses that of the Roman. The Graces of Cæsar's Address were rather Qualities than Virtues; those of Frederick were always glorious, and therefore always glorious. The Quickness of Cæsar's Conduct is never more surprising than by those of Frederick. The Progress of the former was swift, that of the latter was rapid. The Barbarians against whom Cæsar fought, were barbarous in every Respect. The Barbarians who oppose Frederick, were barbarous in all Points but in the Practice of Arms. Cæsar had his Pompey, and Frederick has his Daun. The two former were Romans, the two latter are Germans. Though Cæsar was generally victorious, yet he was surprised by Pompey at Dyrrachium; and though Frederick was almost beaten, yet he was in the very same Manner surprized by Daun at Hochkirchen; and each denied he might have been [illegible] and his Enemy known how to have made the [illegible] Victory.

Cæsar upon finishing his Expedition [illegible] write to the Senate a famous [illegible] with, veni; but Frederick could [illegible] event of the Cloth of his Capitation [illegible] accomplished by the other, [illegible] for the Terrors of his Name prevented his even feeling his Enemies.

In Learning they were equal; both of them were Poets, and both of them Historians, each celebrated the Actions of his own Family, Frederick that of Brandenburgh; Cæsar that of the Julii, which he wrote over the Corpse of his Grand-mother, and of which we have a Fragment in Suetonius. Both of them alike shone in the Arts of polished Life; each of them carried the Muses both into the Field and the Cabinet; and to establish the Character of Frederick by a Part of Prince, [illegible] drawn by Lucan in the following Lines, which he figured as the Character of Cæsar,

"Nil actum credens dum quid superesset agendum."

Hinton hath only this to add to observe, that Cæsar entered the Liberties of Rome, that Frederick defended those of Germany. That Cæsar was debauched, that Frederick is sober. That Cæsar was tall, and Frederick is short; that Cæsar's Nose was hooked, and that Frederick's is square; with a [illegible] that the best Critics have allowed, that it is sufficient, if the Eye of Imagination catches the most striking Characters of Similarity, and a Figure of Fancy shall [illegible] many valuable Effects, which had been buried in the Earth.

The Princess Nimble Nimpence, Capt. Brown, arrived here on Sunday last from Guadaloupe with 18 French Negroes, and other Things, taken on that Island.

The Master of a Ship arrived at Montserrat, has made Oath (as we are informed) to the following Effect, viz. That he sailed from Brest under Convoy of a Man of War, from which he was separated three Days, but joined her again two Days afterwards, when the Captain informed him he had taken two Ships which sailed from Brest the 24th of January, with a Squadron of 8 French Ships of the Line bound for the West-Indies.

N. B. This Article is just now confirmed by Capt. M'Neal, who has got a List of the Ships.

BOSTON, April 9.

Friday last a Vessel arrived at Marblehead in 7 Weeks from Cadiz, and by a Letter from a Gentleman of Credit in that Place we have the following Extract.

"The King of Spain was a dying in January. The French are totally ruined, and it is to be hoped your Forces in America will this Summer strike the last Stroke with the taking Quebec, which I suppose will bring on an Accommodation of public Affairs; more especially if the News just received by Way of Madrid proves true, which is, That the King of Naples has just made a Treaty with the Empress of Russia, wherein it is agreed to marry two of the Neapolitan Princes to the two Russian Princesses; and in case of the Death of the King of Spain, the eldest Son of the King of Naples will be sworn Prince of Asturias, (or Spain) and that his Father will be crowned King of Sicily, renouncing the Kingdom of Naples, which is to be to his second Son; which is quite out of the French Scheme of crowning the Duke of Parma in Naples; whereby a War with France is almost unavoidable, however we have no need to be afraid of them, as they are at present."

Cambridge, April 2, 1759.

THE Comet, which has been seen for a pretty general Topic by Conversation, and the Predictions of which that ancient Casualty to Man, and Terror to more, has at length, (as it was the Time prefixed,) made its Appearance. It was first seen by us for six Years before, on Tuesday the 3d Inst. On Wednesday the Fourth it was seen by Mr. Winthrop in the Morning. I saw it myself, but had the Misfortune not very bright, but had a Tail Northward obliquely downwards, resembling the Southern Cross. It appeared about 5 or 6 Degrees high. It is not visible above the Vapours of the Horizon. It appeared pale, and dimly, from 4 till a Quarter after 5, from which Time the increasing Daylight gradually effaced its Brightness, till about Quarter after 6. It was hardly to be discerned. It was in the middle of the Back of Aquarius; and from its Position among the Fixed Stars, I concluded, that it Rose at 28 Minutes after 2, about Eight Days before the Vernal Equinox, and at 4 Degrees of North Latitude.

Upon Examination I found that this Position might be reduced to the Orbit of the Comet in 1682, which was very probable that this is the same Comet. Upon this Supposition, it appeared to have passed its Perihelion about 20 Days before, and consequently gone to by going of from the Sun; and by approaching to the descending Node, and therefore to be mostly Southward. which has been confirmed by the Observations of the following Morning. It has been in a proper Situation to be observed conveniently since. For a Week before, an uninterrupted Succession of cloudy Weather prevented all.

On Thursday, at the same Hour, I could not discover it, even with the Assistance of a Telescope, principally by the Moon, being very bright. It had not entered under the Horizon 24 Hours, but was a little more southerly.

Friday Morning it appeared very plain, and the Tail rather longer than before, occasioned by the Air's being clearer. It was got still more southerly, and had a very little or no easterly Motion visible; being about 25 Degrees westward of Aquarius, with 4 Degrees and Quarter Latitude.

On this Morning, I was not able to discover any other than the Comet appeared very bright. It had increased, however, since the 5th, and according Judgment to the Southward, as could be expected. It was distant 25 Degrees, near the Equinoctial, with about 2 Degrees and a half North Latitude. I was still very sure that it was a Comet, from its Motion, which was about 5 Degrees Westward, and 1 Degree Northward, from the Place in which I saw it the Day before. It was not visible to the Naked Eye this Morning, but was discovered by Mr. Winthrop and myself with the Telescope.

NEW-YORK, April 16.

Friday last his Majesty's Ship the Lizard, of 20 Guns, Captain Deakes, arrived here from Portsmouth, which she left the 3d inst. February, with the following Ships under Admiral Saunders's Command, to Louisbourg, all of whom the Lizard left about five Weeks since off the Banks of Newfoundland, so that it is probable the Fleet may be arrived at Cape Breton by this Time, viz.

The Neptune of 90 Guns, with the Flag, Admiral Saunders, the Royal William of 84 Guns, the Orford of 70, the Devonshire of 66, the Stirling Castle of 70, the Medway of 60, the Dublin of 74, and the Alcide of 74 Guns, with three Bombs, and three Fireships.

There were two other Ships of the Line cleared with the Fleet, bound up the Streights.

His Majesty's Ships the Mermaid and Success, just arrived at South-Carolina from England, have on board each 20,000*l.*

Saturday Morning last his Majesty's Frigate Trent, Capt. Lindsey, arrived here, and brought in a Transport Ship they took belonging to Admiral Holmes's Fleet. And Yesterday Morning one other of the Fleet (a Transport) also came into Port. The Trent passed the Admiral four or five Days after they sailed; and on the 11th of February, being in Company with his Majesty's Frigate the Vestal, the latter slipp'd and gave chase to the Bellona Frigate of France, richly loaded with Cotton, Indigo, and Coffee, besides Plate, and chased from Martinico; and, after a smart Engagement, struck. But the Trent was not able to come up to the Vestal's Assistance. The following is brought by the Trent, and is an Extract of a Letter from Cape Hood, Commander of his Majesty's Ship the Vestal, of 20 Guns, to Capt. Schomberg, of the Trent Frigate, now in this Harbour, dated at Sea, February 22, 1759.

"Being a Head of the Squadron Yesterday Morning, I saw a Sail to the S. E. and gave Chace: at 11 I discovered the Chace to be an Enemy, and made the Signal on the Admiral: as I did that for being able to speak with her. At Half past Two I began to engage the Bellona of 32 Guns, and 242 Men, within Pistol Shot, and continued very close Action till Half past Four, when being dismasted, all but her Foremast, she struck. Her Loss I cannot ascertain, as the Prisoners speak differently About it. However the Slaughter was great, as my Officer when he took Possession, found 32 dead upon the Decks, and above 40 wounded. The Vestal had five killed, and 22 wounded, but not one dangerous. Wodrel among the Wounded. She is a King's Frigate, from Martinico, came from thence in no small Hurry, on the Appearance of Mr. Moore on the 26th in the Morning of the 8th Month, and was chased by three of his Ships. You'll think it extraordinary, but true it is, when I began chasing him, he was so far in the Wind's Eye, that I could not see above Half his Courses out of the Waters; I never fore-reached upon him the whole Day, but got up with him by dint of going to the Windward."

PHILADELPHIA, April 16.

On Saturday last Capt. Chancellor arrived here from Madeira, in 6x Weeks Passage, and advises of the Arrival there of Capt. Lewis of New-York, who, on the 10th of February, was brought to by Commodore Keppel, twenty Leagues to the Westward of Madeira, with three Sail of the Line, homeward bound from Goree.

Capt. Gregory, from Barbados, informs us, that a Fleet of above 40 Sail of Merchantmen had arrived there from England, most of them for Antigua (among which four Ships with Troops on board) under Convoy of his Majesty's Ship Emerald: That in going to Antigua a French Privateer Sloop got in among the Fleet, on which the Emerald immediately purfued her, and no Doubt was made of her being taken in a short Time, the King's Ship going very fast. Capt. Gregory left the Fleet off of Antigua.

Sunday last Captain Gardner arrived here in 16 Days from Antigua, by whom we are informed, that our Troops on Guadaloupe were said to be healthy, and had the Enemy between two Fires. That three Sloops, with about 400 Volunteers, had sailed from Antigua to their Assistance, under Convoy of the Privateer Sloop Beggar, Captain Troup, of New-York. That several Gentlemen, at St. Christophers, were putting themselves at the Head of their Negroes, in order to go and join his Majesty's Forces; and it was expected their Example would be followed by the other Islanders. A noble Spirit is general prevailing towards reducing the French on Guadaloupe (which, it was believed, must soon surrender) and elsewhere. That Commodore Moore, with the Fleet, was going to Martinico, to endeavour to draw out the French Fleet to an Engagement; and if he could not do that, it was thought he would attempt the
